A GOOD BEGINNING. our friends in the country to gather their cotton before the fall and winter rains set in. Who does not see the importance of the suggestion? Thousands and thou ands of bales of cotton have been lost by the rains and winds during the last seven or eight days, and this same sort of weather may continue for days or weeks. Why raise more cotton than can be saved in good time? Corn can remain in the field for weeks and weeks of bad weather without material loss; not so with cotton. Double the acreage of corn and decrease to some extent that of cotton, and much more corn and nearly as much cotton will be saved as is now done. Abundant corn crops lead to abundant hog crops, and these two make plenty in the land, and decrease the amount of money needed by the farmers. If we have but little money let us raise a great deal of what we need and buy but little, and this will be a cure for "hard times." last Saturday night, as was evidenced by the large attendance, by the enthuslasm, and by the determined spirit of conciliation that exhibited itself in all clashing and conflict very unpleasant indeed to gentlemen who have to meet every day, and who naturally enough have no opposing interests. To obviate this, and place themselves right every day before the public, relieving us at the same time of all responsibility, the leading grocery and provision dealers of the city have resolved to make use of the chamber of commerce and board of trade just as the dealers in cotion do the cotton exchange. They will report their transactions every day up to a certain hour, and a committee appointed for appeal to the court of last resort. SOME Two months ago we urged upon The large crowd which attended the Democratic meeting on Saturday night, the harmony, prudence and wisdom which characterized the proceedings, presage a glorious Democratic victory in our approaching municipal election. All present seemed disposed to go to work with a "long pull, a strong pull, and a pull altogether" for an able and efficient Democratic mayor. There are, of course, outside growlers and malcontents, men too great in their own estimation to follow the lead of either one of the two great political parties now in existence, and not sufficiently great to create a new party to suit themselves; men who esteem themselves wiser than all the organized talent and more patriotic and virtuous than their fellow-men, and therefore atter a general condemnation of existing parties, their leading men, their principles and their practices. But not withstanding the factious opposition of this small class, we are satisfied that an overwhelming majority of Democrats heartily approve of the object of the meeting held

IN JUNE, 1874, the town of Pulaski, in that was done. Two years ago Major J. J. Busby was nominated for mayor as the people's candidate, as a nonpartisan candidate, by one of the largest mass-meetings ever held in the Greenlaw Operahouse. Major Busby was unobjectionable; his integrity and capability were unquestioned. Here was a splendid opportunity to lift high the mon-partisan banner. But Major Busby was defeated, and we find men who refused to support him and some of whom voted for Loague, the Radical partisan nominee, now clamoring for a citizens' ticket, and sneering at a Democratic nomination! The APPEAL earnestly supported Major Busby, the people's candidate; but he was defeated by
